A NEW BOOK

By WILLIAM J. LONG

xvii. + 557 pages, illustrated, $1.40

No mere catalogue, this; no dreary "Baedeker" to literature. For William J. Long realizes that literature may not be learned as is the "rule of three" or the rules governing the ablative. "Rather," he reasons, "let us put into the hands of the student the greatest and best of the world's literature, with a book that will awaken in him appreciation and enthusiasm for it." In crisp and interesting manner the author has covered a long stretch of time, summing up in logical fashion typical men and their books of every period, for the use of schools offering a brief comprehensive course.
